Dear Chairman Becerra and Vice Chair Crowley:

We request you publish online the rules for the House of Representatives Democratic Caucus. Just as publication of the rules for the House of Representatives is necessary for government accountability, so too is publication of caucus rules. Public access empowers understanding of legislative branch activities, provides essential detail on how you govern, and exemplifies your commitment to open government.

The rules adopted by your caucus at the beginning of each Congress significantly affect the legislative process. They determine consequential matters such as how legislation emerges from the chamber and who is eligible to lead each committee. For example, the House's policies regarding public access to legislation three days prior to a vote and restrictions on earmarks were set by that conference's rules. In addition, the rules set the default regarding the caucus' commitment to be transparent, and highlight how the different parties would lead the chamber.

The House Republican Conference already published its rules online for the 113th Congress. We hope this policy will be adopted by both parties and in both chambers for the 114th Congress. With trust in Congress at historic lows, proactively enabling the public to understand the rules you have set for yourself is an indisputable necessity. We ask that you make the rules accessible on the Internet as soon as possible, preferably in the same format in which the House of Representatives, the Library of Congress and the Government Printing Office already publish House bill information on Beta.Congress.Gov: in a modern, open, restriction-free format that a user can download in bulk.

We welcome the opportunity to discuss this with you further. Please contact Matt Rumsey, Policy Associate at the Sunlight Foundation (mrumsey@sunlightfoundation.com or 202-742-1520).
